

SundayStyles

The New York Times

THE NEW YORK TIMES, SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 16, 2014

Arena

HIGHLIGHTS FROM TMAGAZINE.COM

VISITING THE SOURCE

Coffee Chronicles

Since opening its first roastery in Bogotá in 2006, the Colombian company Devoción has sourced what its owner, Steven Sutton, categorizes as “third-wave coffee,” a term reserved for the highest-quality artisanal beans. Now, Mr. Sutton and his business partners sell 150 tons of coffee each year in the United States and Colombia. And this fall, in anticipation of the company’s first stateside outpost — a flagship roaster and coffee shop, Botica del Café (above), which opens on Sunday in the Williamsburg neighborhood of Brooklyn — Devoción invited T to its coffee farms for a peek at where it all began.

In a slide show at tmagazine.com, Mr. Sutton leads a tour through the remote mountain plantations where the beans grow, and offers a look at the Bogotá facility where experts roast the product. Sales of the coffee benefit indigenous groups like the Karmata Rúa Antioquia and help to rehabilitate communities through the sponsorship of local schools. ROCKY CASALE